A capacity crowd filled Raleigh's McKimmon Center on April 1, 2004 to attend North Carolina's first brownfields workshop for developers and local governments.

Topics ranged from grants and public/private partnering to case studies from successful developers and lender perspectives on financing brownfields projects.

Our EPA panelists, Wanda Jennings (left) and Beverly Williams (right), answered plenty of questions in the morning about EPA's brownfields grants programs.

And after a humorous lunch speech on the origins of North Carolina's original Brownfields Statute from its primary drafter, Richard Whisnant, participants attended one of two breakout sessions...

...one session designed for local governments...

...and one session for prospective developers.

Everyone learned a lot and still managed to get in a little networking.
